Cult activity thrives on campus

by Tim Scratch and David Sniff
Staff Writers

In an anonymous dorm room at UMO, seven students hold hands in a circle, swaying slightly to light, almost random guitar chords flowing from the stereo. They do not speak, but claim to communicate telepathically. They are all under the influence of the hallucinogenic drug Danuto, a derivative of the Brazilian palo root, and claim to have found enough inner peace and tranquility to save the world. The "alir", as they prefer to be called, say palo root is a holy sacrament of their faith for the 1980s, The Chapel of Love; the FBI says it's a Schedule I drug and possession of it is a federal crime.

The robed man stands in a five-pointed star outlined on the floor. He chants ancient words with the other robed figures before him. Suddenly he flings his arms into the air and a jet of flame springs up at his feet. The devil worshippers fall to their knees and chant feverishly. Satan's Minions have come to UMO.

It is hard to imagine that these clean-cut college students are members of one of the fastest growing cults in the world. They dress conservatively, study hard, smile earnestly and say hello to people they don't even know. But when the weekend comes, they don white Oxford shirts and ties or plaid skirts and peasant blouses and go door to door to sell plastic purple flowers to support Deacon Kim Duc Jones and his Church Sacred of Free Enterprise.

These scenes, and many others like them, are becoming increasingly common at UMO. In recent weeks an estimated 12 "cult" churches have sprung up on campus leaving students and administrators worried.

Boss Morality, director of Residential Life, said, "We're doing everything we can to eliminate cult influences in UMO's dormitories. We have instituted rules forbidding animal sacrifices and door to door solicitation. We've also alerted the UMOPD to the possibility that some cults might be abusing dangerous drugs."

A member of Gannet Hall's dormitory staff, who requested anonymity for fear of retribution from cult members, reported that a coven of Satan's Minions had held a ritual in that dorm only last week. "They built a fire in one of the rooms and I think they might have burned some animal in some sort of weird sacrifice," May B. Suhn said.

Detective Burgess Thierry of the UMOPD said, "So far, they haven't broken any laws that we know of. But we're certainly keeping our eyes open, our ears to the ground and our noses in other people's business. We're hoping to establish some link between these cults and drug trafficking on campus. We're also looking into the possibility that they may be responsible for the disappearance of several sheep from the UMO farms."

First asphalt rain injures three at UMO

Scoop Jackson
Staff Writer

Three UMO students were injured Thursday and thousands of dollars in damages were caused to university buildings and parked cars following the first Maine appearance of the newly discovered phenomenon called "asphalt rain."

Harland S. Quire, 21, a junior recreation and parks management major from Old Orchard Beach, received multiple contusions, two broken ribs and a mild concussion in the two-minute shower of asphalt chunks. He is listed in stable condition at Eastern Maine Medical Center in Bangor and is being kept overnight for observation.

Eugene Changling, 26, a senior Forestry major from Revere, Mass., and Martha Scum, 17, a freshman Arts and Sciences student from Waterville, were treated for minor contusions and released from the Cutler Health Center.

"It was like a whole parking lot in pieces falling all around you," Scum said. "First there was this wicked lightning storm. I thought that was pretty weird because, you know, it's winter. But anyway, after the lightning it didn't rain or anything. Then all this asphalt, really big chunks of it starts falling out of the sky. One hit my arm and it hurt real bad. It was really wierd, you know?"

A single piece of asphalt measuring almost one square foot and weighing 19 pounds punched a hole three feet wide through the roof of the East Annex. Assistant Professor of Broadcasting Jon Athontankle said he was walking down the first-floor hallway next to WMEB's studios when the asphalt chunk crashed through the ceiling from the second floor. "I was walking down the hallway next to WMEB's studios when this asphalt chunk crashed through the ceiling from the second floor," he said.

Jack Pimping, a junior marketing major, said that his 1976 purple Cadillac Eldorado was hit by as many as five asphalt chunks and estimated the damage to the vehicle totalled $950. "I couldn't believe it when I saw it," Pimping said. "I had just paid $300 for a new red convertible top and three pieces of asphalt went right

Tools reveal bedroom personality

Tom St. Atusquo
Staff Writer

The weekend hobbyist whose overzealousness has brought the hobby out of the workshop and into the bedroom may not be as bizarre as many people believe, says UMO Professor of Human Behavior Rex Whelp.

"I believe the weekend cabinetmaker who's brought a level or a ripsaw into the bedroom is actually a shy and sensitive man who has difficulty expressing feelings to the people he knows and loves," Whelp said. "This man is frequently arrested in the park late at night for attempting to express his feelings to people he doesn't know."

Whelp's statements come at the end of an intensive two-year study sponsored in part by the National Enquirer. The research project's preliminary title is "Power Tools You Keep in Your Bedroom Reveal Your Personality."

Whelp's said the inclusion of UMO's intelligentsia should prove the validity of the data collected, and erase any misconceptions people may hold about the popular national magazine.

"I know the Enquirer's been caught in a couple of bloopers—you know, JFK was not hiding in Cuba, and mustachioed men do not throw better parties, but this one's for real," Whelp said.

The research included more than 20 handheld tools and several table models. Whelp said only the most precisely calibrated tools from Orono's House of Hardware were used in testing, and carpenters who had histories of going to bed still wearing workbelts and workboots weren't even considered in the final results.

"That's basically just a stupid habit," Whelp said.

Following are some of the more popular tools in Whelp's study, and the professor's interpretations of the hobbyists' requests for particular hardware:

Circular saws and smaller table saws: These hobbyists are unusually fine dancers, especially with Latin-American tempos, and, in fact, throw the best parties in the world. They often lie when telling people about books they've read.

Drills: The interests of these hobbyists lean toward bullwhips and Jell-O. It's easy to see he's a man of mixed emotions and probably wouldn't last two minutes in either Paris Island or Fire Island. Not really a momma's boy, most probably because she wouldn't keep him.

Sanders: This hobbyist is really a poet at heart, but a slob on his feet. He or she is often a Taurus, but will lie and tell listeners of his Virgo tendencies felt earlier in the day.

Protractors and slide-rules: This enthusiast is undoubtedly an introvert with an above-average understanding of the abacus. He thinks himself a so-so lover, but in reality has no business being in the bedroom at all.

Whelp said he enjoyed the chance to work with the staff of a famous magazine. "They're really a fun bunch of guys and after meeting them I don't wonder anymore why mothers are afraid to let their daughters out after dark," he said.

John Paul creates St. Patrick of UMaine

VATICAN CITY—In a rare departure from the strict requirements for canonization, Pope John Paul II declared UMaine Chancellor Patrick McCarthy a saint of the Roman Catholic Church.

Church tradition requires that a candidate for the sainthood must have "conducted a life of heroic sanctity" and have performed two independently verified miracles. Opponents to McCarthy's sainthood claim he has performed only one miracle.

"There is no doubt he has shown great talent in the miracle department," intoned Cardinal Altonnani of Milan, "but I count only one miracle to date and until he performs a second I don't feel he deserves sainthood."

No member of the Council of Cardinals disputes that McCarthy wrought his first miracle by engineering his retirement and appointment to a full professorship in the UMaine system. Many conservative cardinals however, object to their centrist and liberal colleagues contention that he performed a second miracle in receiving a $52,000 annual salary and tenure.

"They're trying to split one miracle into two," Altonnani explained solemnly. "We think tenure and an outrageous salary are simply icing on the miracle, so to speak, sort of like holy gravy."

The pope has stepped in to break the deadlock in the council and it was his decision to bypass church tradition and immediately elevate McCarthy to the sainthood despite the protests that sparked more controversy.

Speaking here yesterday, John Paul II said, "Yes, there is controversy among the clergy. But in my holy opinion, he has wrought two separate and distinct miracles. He's a real wizard, definitely a Chosen One."

Sources at UMaine campuses report Residential Life officials were looking into the possibility of serving green beer in the commons on March 17 each year to honor UMaine's own Saint Patrick.

through it. It's totally destroyed."

At a press conference called after the storm, Vane Weatherly, a spokesman for the National Weather Bureau, said that there is no way to accurately predict an asphalt shower. "We do, however, know what causes them. Asphalt showers result when a significant amount of petroleum waste product emissions combine with airborne sulphuric acid. By itself, the acid causes the phenomenon known as 'acid rain,' which is comparatively less harmful. But when it combines with the petroleum wastes, it clearly presents a serious health hazard," he said.

Weatherly offered a few suggestions for how a person can protect himself during an asphalt shower. "Your best bet is to be inside, preferably in a brick building. The damage at the East Annex shows that wooden structures are not completely safe. But if that is the only shelter you have, try to stay close to a wall or in a doorway. At all costs avoid being in the middle of the room.

"If you can't get inside, a car will provide some shelter. But a large asphalt chunk can pretty much flatten a small car. Actually, if you're outside, the best thing to do is to get into an open area. The asphalt chunks fall fairly far apart and are relatively easy to dodge."

Ein Stein, associate professor of physics, said that the asphalt chunks can reach terminal velocity if the clouds they condense in are high enough. Terminal velocity is the speed at which a free-falling object ceases to accelerate.

"For a chunk of asphalt the size of a frisbee," Stein said, "that could be as high as 140 miles per hour. At that point, terminal velocity can take on a whole new meaning."

Religious war

Recently there has been a rash of sacreligious cults forming on this campus. It has got to be put to a stop.

These so called 'religions' do nothing but poison the minds of innocent youths. They are drawing these young people out of the grave of God. Making salvation almost impossible.

The university is doing the right thing with their all-out effort to force these heathens off the campus. They do not belong here, nor in any other part of the civilized world.

These unholy organizations serve no purpose other than to exploit others, and to spread the use of dangerous drugs. They serve absolutely no social purpose.

Every effort should be made to eliminate these people. The church brought in 30 special missionaries to help combat this evil influence. Sort of like calling in the Marines to get rid of a few commies. But this is not a rescue mission, this is a war. They are going to aggressively fight.

That is what this problem needs. Someone doing something, not just this useless nickle and dime stuff the university is doing. The way they're going at it they'll be years before they accomplish anything.

The devout students on this campus should do everything they can to aid the missionaries in their battle against these horrid Satanists.

You need not vary for your souls, with God on our side, there is absolutely no chance that we could lose.

Many thousand years ago Satan fell from the grave of God and was forced into hell. Now, in the 20th century Satan is trying to come out of hell and into our world.

But as God is our savior we can overcome these heathens and purge this campus of their evil.

On Edge

NIGHT R. STALKER

Ambiguity: the source of exploitation

Consternation. Slightly exceeding thirty one days, I shall venture into my final semester at this institution. I was going to write about the inner apprehensive sensations hidden deep within the graduating senior which are masked adequately by the unsubdued desire, yearn and need to enter into the lurid state of intoxication. I truly believed capturing this faint heart timorousness on the naked truth of the print media might, believe it or not, yes, put a deterence on such delinquent behavior.

In fact, I know you are going to call me a zealot, and who wouldn't, but I was going to go so far as to suggest we all seize the opportunity to penetrate the veritable truth of our existence. As Darwin once wrote during highly controversial times, "Monkey see, monkey do."

Yet, this is but a single unit expressing an act (or product) of thinking which could (or possibly hope to) simplify the inner definitions of the physical illusion of the once sacred exterior of the species -- Home Erectus. This is nothing more than a mere deletion of the age old proverb: "The strongest and fittest shall survive." To possibly imagine -- men have spent centuries pondering this argument.

But then, that would have been laboring the point, right? It has been, much to democracy's dismay, the unescapable reality that most politicians avoid major issues while in the midst of an election year. It is apparent to me and to many who exercise their constitutional rights to find themselves "casting a ballot," if you will, that the politician within the stereotypical norm of that which society has produced will remain abstinent of the issues when vis-a-vis with the opposition. One might say this is languid (see impotence), but I say it is a major excrecence to something so erroneous and incorrigible as financially decelerated countries located in the unnamable (in terms of geographic endroit) entitled "The Third World."

But this isn't the sort of thing you write columns about. Readers are alienated because they are too busy getting drunk -- if I may be so informal for one brief lapse into the lower, uneducated world.

Reading this manuscript over, it is apparent that Reagan's foreign policy is one of the unsung heroes of the realms surrounding the uncontrollable aspects and hypothesis within this institution.

Yet, in a moment of apathy for the cunning vessel of the pen which has been proven in years prior to the present and will still remain to be proven in years subsequent to the writing of this equivocal essay, although it's been said many times, many ways, the pen is mightier than the sword.

Night R. Stalker is a nocturnal emission whose state of mind state of consciousness changes every six months.

The promise of the male model featured in the ad to wake up with you every morning in May" is the product of an 18th Century chauvenistic state of mind. The implication is not only a gross insult to the women of the UMO community, but also to the many, many men in or midst who are not afraid to admit that women are their equals.

While I am certainly offended by the content of the ad, I am far more disappointed by your policies which allow ads of this nature to be published. Such policies only serve to perpetuate sexist myths and stereotypes; to close minds rather than open them.

It does not matter that the models featured in the calendar are reincarnations of Greek gods whose tanned skin could warm mine anytime, those ads are in extremely poor taste.

Help the Earth, not hurt it

To the editor:

They say it is natural for human beings to kill other animals and kill living plants, whenever we want. But how can we be so superior and what is natural about killing things that keep us alive?

Another thing that concerns me is the nuclear arms race and the cold war between the United States and the Soviet Union. At the rate things are going, soon we will be spending our entire national budget on nuclear bombs and other dangerous weapons. But we already have quite a few more nuclear bombs than we need, enough to blow up the Earth quite a few times. The money we spend on these weapons could be spent to improve our world. We could feed all the hungry people and give them new clothes and warm houses. We could clean up the streets and rehabilitate criminals rather than kill them in electric chairs.

It is about time that people started to think about the good things human beings can do for each other instead of hurting each other and our planet.

● Cult

shock and dismay to the sudden flourishing of cult activity on campus, cult members seem to be at a loss to explain the bewilderment of others.

"I just don't see how they can call, what we do 'misguided,'" said Sunshine Niagra, a member of the Chapel of Love. "We simply try to tell people that true peace and understanding comes from a closer relationship with nature, specifically palo root." We love everyone and everything. We worship love and life. Whatever anyone wants to do is fine with us. We never say anything bad about anyone. Love is the way to solve the world's problems. If Reagan could only learn to love Andropov then we could put a stop to the arms race. But if he doesn't want to, that's OK, because we love him."

But Father Paul Priestly of the Newman Center said the brand of peace, love and understanding advocated by the Chapel of Love and other cults is not the same as that of the Christian faiths. "It is only a temporary love like you find after happy hour in a cheap bar. These cults promote this type of love by luring young innocents in with cheap sex and drugs. And other cults like that of the Malaysian heretic Deacon Jones are nothing more than a front for tax-free capitalist ventures."

"Exactly," said Sarah Homely, a member of Jones' Sacred Church of Free Enterprise, "I'm surprised any old-style believer could come close to understanding the meaning and depth of our faith. We praise the almighty dollar and all the good it brings us. Worshippers donate 85 percent of all their earnings to the church. We use the money to buy real estate, especially condominiums in places like Florida, Palm Springs and St. Thomas. These are our temples and every member of the church has access to them for worship."

"All we know is that these people worship elm trees and see the Dutch Elm bacteria as agents of the devil."

—Tanya Ceto
Assistant to the President for Student Affairs

Homely seemed as if she did not understand Priestly's contention that the church was nothing more than a tax-free vacation club. "How can that be? We are all very happy and love each other. Anyone, even a poor, heathen Russian peasant, who joins our church and worships in our temples sees immediately that ours is the True Way."

Assistant to the President for Student Affairs Tanya Ceto refused comment on the moral or legal aspects of the cults but did offer a brief description of every group her office had detected on campus.

Satan's Minions—"Basic satanists. Many believe they possess magical powers. They worship fire mostly and usually make sacrifices of sheep or baby goats."

Chapel of Love—"Due to the effects of a drug that the FBI reports is highly dangerous, they become listless, sexually prolific and claim to love an impossible number of people. Pretty wacko, if you ask me."

Church of the Free Enterprise—"Capitalism as a religion, pure and simple. I think the threat to society these people present is pretty clear."

Church of the Divine Elm—"All we know is that these people worship elm trees and see Dutch Elm bacteria as agents of the devil. Most of them are forestry majors and we're looking into the possibility of this just being some sort of twisted prank within the Forestry college."

Ceto said there were several other cults on campus but her office did not yet have descriptions of them. "We haven't taken any action yet, other than cracking down on rules in the Dorms because we have no proof they have broken any laws. However, if we turn up evidence that they are promoting any sort of activity which is inappropriate in an academic community, we will take action in our usual manner—we'll cancel cults at UMO."

Red Sox sign has-been for 1984 season

The Boston Red Sox announced Thursday that former catcher and present co-owner of the team, Hackwood Suckovin, will be reactivated as the team's catcher for the 1984 season.

Suckovin, who has pulled numerous boners and helped lead the team to total degradation, said he is thrilled that he will be able to screw up on the field now, instead of from the sidelines.

Red Sox manager Ralph Hulk said he is happy about Suckovin's reactivation.

"I think 'the Hacker' will add a lot of consistency to the team. I won't have to worry about him leading the rookies astray because his knees are locked into a permanent squat position. I'm afraid he might not move quick enough to avoid oncoming runners rounding homeplate," Hulk said.

Hulk said he plans to pitch Dimented Eckersleazy more often next season as he will rely on him to save Suckovin some work by pitching his infamous home run ball.

Suckovin, who is undergoing therapy for Geritol abuse, will be reporting to spring training in Winoheaven, Florida in early December to get a jump on the other team members.

Mrs. Thomas Yickey, co-owner of the Red Sox along with Suckovin, said she is happy that Suckovin will be on the field rather than in the office.

"Now I'll be making all the decisions myself and he'll have to live by what I do. It's great to watch him actually put 'the tools of ignorance' back on, although I thought he was wearing them all the time," she said.

Fan reaction to the Suckovin was fairly consistent.

Goshin Darnit, from Sweet Pie, Mass., said he is excited about having Suckovin on the team.

"It's great! The pitchers will finally have a permanent target, one that won't be able to move around and confuse them behind the plate. It will be just like having Carving Fist back again," Darnit said.

Sarah Simpleton, a freshman at the Curly Cue Hair Academy in Liceville, Mass., said, "Hack is so cute and I love older men, so I'm happy that he'll be back. I think catchers are so cute and I think the team needs another veteran player to give leadership to the younger players."

Herman Hangover, a vender at Femway Park, said he thinks Suckovin should attract older crowds and he is happy about that because, he said, "they generally tip better than the stingy teenagers and sticky-mouthed punks."

"I don't care if he's any good or not as long as he brings in an older crowd. The bleachers are getting to be too much for me especially because of those obnoxious college kids from the sticks."

Rumor has it that UMZero's Promoman Dudley Doright will give free lifetime season tickets to the individual who streaks through tomorrow night's basketball game against Fay's Dic in the cockroach infested gym.

Doright said his committee wanted students to leave the campus with a laugh.

"Banan's the Bear will guide the individual up and down the court to make sure he is not hiding anything, anything."

One of the roundball players, (sometimes sportswriter) will also perform during halftime by dunking the ball with his nose. Could be very interesting.

What will I do without my "running partner"? I'll miss you. Hope we have as many fun miles in 84'.

Mary,

There comes a time when,
unfortunately, friends must part. You have decided that this is not the place for you, and it is time to move on and continue. I'll always remember the great times we had together. (right hun?). I and all the others you have known here will never forget you. You're one of a kind.
The best of luck to you Mary. Keep in touch.
